Mr. Greeley proceeded to give his no-tions of the terms upon which peace might be honorably made, and mentioned the abandonment of slavery by dred millions to compensate loyal owners, a liberal policy toward offenders, &c.
The President's response was a profsition that Mr. Greeley should in person visit Niegara, and see what the socalled rebel Commissioners had to say. Greeley reluctantly proceeded upon this mission, after exchanging two or three notes with the President on the subject. The next thing was a telegram from Greeley, at Niagara Falls, to the President, stating that "the corr spondence" had been shown the rebel Commissioners, and that the terms of peace were satisfactory. It did not occur to the President that all the correspondence had not been shown, and he was astonished to believe himself informed that Messrs.
